Q1 Market Update: Strong Outlook for Healthcare Services M&A Market Persists

Healthcare services consolidation in Q1 2022 briefly slowed relative to the record year of activity in 2021. Although deal count decreased, investor interest has not waned. Value-based care models and tech-enabled services came to the forefront as leading value drivers of early 2022 transactions. Increased adoption of value-based reimbursement models spurred acquisition activity for both providers and payors to participate in broader care coordination. Tech-enabled services bolster broader capabilities and, as healthcare notoriously lags in technological advancement, leaves significant opportunity for investment and exponential growth.

Transaction activity in Q1 2022 was landmarked with several notable transactions including eight sponsor exits and over fifteen new private equity platforms. Sectors such as physician services, healthcare IT, behavioral health, and home health realized premium valuations due to prevailing healthcare tailwinds. Athenahealth's sale to Bain Capital and Hellman & Friedman, as well as Physician Partners' sale to Kinderhook Industries highlight these trends. The threat of rising interest rates created more uncertainty in the market but ultimately did not significantly impact investor appetite or private credit markets within healthcare services. Due to high levels of dry powder and corporate cash and residual build-up of investor appetite from the pandemic, EBITDA multiples remain competitive in both private equity and strategic transactions.

As healthcare providers continue to rebound successfully from the pandemic, investors are regaining confidence in the market and certainty of its long-term outlook. Provident anticipates another strong year in healthcare services M&A and expects additional sizeable transactions complemented by subsequent add-on activity throughout the remainder of 2022.

Healthcare M&A Deal Stratification

Investor interest within healthcare services remains strong despite a lag in deal volume in Q1 2022. Private equity investments totaled 160 transactions, slightly ahead of strategic investments totaling 144 transactions. Home health and hospice led sector-specific transaction activity with 30 announced deals. The physician services areas of ophthalmology, gastroenterology, and orthopedics experienced significant consolidation activity with 17, 14, and 13 transactions, respectively. Other growing sectors within healthcare services such as mental health and staffing also realized meaningful transaction activity.

Q1-2022 Autism Services Update

Market Update

The autism services space continues to consolidate in the face of lingering labor and staffing challenges, albeit at a slower pace than in quarters past. While transaction volume in Q1 2022 was relatively modest, many of the deals that occurred were sizable and will have a meaningful impact on the autism service market.

For example, Autism Motion Clinics, one of the largest independent agencies in the country, aligned with Arsenal Capital-backed HopeBridge in one of the larger strategic transactions over the last 12 to 18 months. Empower Behavioral also went through a transformative deal in merging with Two Sigma's pediatric platform, Circle of Care. The deal represents another platform with tangential services to ABA moving into autism services, a theme that Provident expects to play out as the space continues to mature.

Q1-2022 Dental Services Update

Market Update

The DSO market continued to experience significant activity in Q1-2022. Notable transactions include the sale of dentist-owned practices to established DSOs, the formation of new DSOs by private equity investors, and the exits of investor-owned DSOs.

Across these three transaction types, Provident has noted a continued acceleration in specialty dental consolidation. In early 2022, Shore Capital Partners formed a new OMFS-focused DSO, OMS360, and completed a transaction with Community OFS, a multi-state oral surgery practice. Additionally, Blue Sea Capital invested in SIMKO Specialty Dental, which provides Orthodontic and Pediatric DSO services, and Spark Dental Management acquired Children's Dental Health.

While larger platform transactions are becoming more common, the volume of small and mid-sized, dentist-owned practice sales remains high both across general and specialty dental.

Provident expects that the proven success of investment across the DSO spectrum, consistent volume of practice transactions, and investor demand for quality practices will drive continued market activity and valuations.

Q1-2022 Dermatology Update

Market Update

Dermatology deal activity continues to rebound to pre-pandemic levels as the space benefits from macroeconomic tailwinds driving demand for services. Q1 was especially active from a dealmaking perspective, characterized by a few large, landmark transactions. Forefront Dermatology, one of the largest consolidators in the space, and Epiphany Dermatology, both took on investment from new private equity partners in Q1. For Forefront, Partners Group is their third sponsor since they initially took on investment from Varsity Healthcare Partners in 2014. Anne Arundel Dermatology (now on their second PE partner) also made a splash with the acquisition of Academic Alliance in Dermatology, one of the largest independent practices in the country. Provident expects transaction volume to remain robust, barring any recessionary pressures.

Q1-2022 Durable Medical Equipment (DME) Update

Market Update

The market for consolidation in DME continued its momentum into 2021 with several notable transactions announced both in the early weeks of the new year and in March as Q1 ended. Private equity platforms and strategic acquirers alike have continually sought opportunities to increase economies of scale. Operators with a defensible market position and significant back-office capabilities will continue to be poised to attract premium valuations in the M&A markets.

Provident expects M&A momentum within DME to continue as recently formed platforms seek to expand their geographic and product footprints via acquisition.

Notable Transaction

January 2022

CPAP.com, a leading DTC e-commerce provider of sleep apnea equipment, received a strategic growth equity investment from private equity firm Cathay Capital. The transaction provides CPAP.com with significant capital and operational resources to capture incremental market share as demand for sleep apnea equipment is projected to continue its ascent in the near-term.

Private equity sponsors have shown continued demand for DME businesses exhibiting a defensible market position and a demonstrated growth strategy to effectively capitalize on the prevailing tailwinds in the sector.

January	AdaptHealth	Community Surgical Supply	Community Surgical Supply, a provider of respiratory equipment including oxygen, vents, and other HME, was acquired by AdaptHealth in a $100M+ transaction. The deal represents AdaptHealth's largest acquisitions since its $2bn+ buyout of AeroCare in December 2020. AdaptHealth remains the most active consolidator across DME and continues to seek opportunities for strategic inorganic expansion.
January	MSC BioMedical	Repair Authority	MSC Biomedical Services has acquired Repair Authority to create a nationwide provider of HME repair services. While the two entities will operate independently in the near-term, the combined company will provide repair services to a range of HME products to both its national & regional commercial clients in addition to retail customers.

Q1-2022 Gastroenterology Update

Market Update

The Gastroenterology sector continued to see elevated transaction volumes over the first quarter of 2022. PE-backed platforms have continued to execute on their aggressive add-on acquisition strategies, maintaining valuations for premium assets in the space. Gastro Health, One GI, and GI Alliance each made at least three acquisitions this quarter, with no signs of slowing down in the near future. Provident expects top platforms to continue to compete as they look to expand geographically as well as to build density in current markets.

Q1-2022 Healthcare Education Update

Market Update

The healthcare education sector exhibited robust consolidation activity in the first quarter of 2022. Continuing medical education (CME) and professional training, in particular, has been the most active segment in terms of M&A activity. Recent deal flow has been driven by the consolidation of tech-enabled CME services, aimed at diversifying service lines and adapting to pandemic-impacted operations.

Investors pursuing this tech-enabled thesis are extremely diverse, ranging from healthcare IT companies to broader education platforms to financial sponsors. Physitrack, for example, a physiotherapy SaaS platform, acquired CME provider PTcourses.com, citing synergies that are expected to expand the margin profile of the platform to 45%.

Provident expects healthcare education M&A momentum to accelerate throughout 2022 as a range of platforms and new investors increasingly look to capture market share in the CME space.

Notable Transaction

In March 2022, TRC Healthcare, a portfolio company of Levine Leichtman Capital Partners, announced its acquisition of Qure Healthcare. Based in San Francisco, California, Qure provides proprietary simulation courses measuring clinical practice to over 20,000 physicians. The deal represents TRC's continued optimism in the CME and professional training sector following its three prior acquisitions in the space. TRC acquired CriticalPoint, NetCE, and Bula Intelligence in 2020 and 2021, highlighting the uniquely favorable tailwinds perpetuated by COVID-19.

The transaction demonstrates the strong appetite for investment across the sector and the ability for a pure play healthcare education platform to scale successfully.

Q1-2022 Healthcare IT Update

Market Update

While deal flow in the Healthcare Information Technology (HCIT) sector in the first quarter of 2022 has slowed following 2021's breakthrough year for digital health, several notable transactions across HCIT sub-verticals were completed in Q1. The continued shift in patient preference towards digital channels of communication and care delivery due to their efficiency and personalization has continued to drive demand for implementation throughout all healthcare services sectors, despite a general relaxation of public health mandates which have lessened the need for virtual care models.

Although there has been a lull in deal flow so far in 2022, Provident expects strategic acquisitions to ramp up as companies are looking to expand their service offerings and reach a larger patient-base.

Q1-2022 Healthcare Staffing Update

Market Update

Provident observed accelerated transaction activity in the staffing sector in Q1 2022. A study conducted by Vivian in 2021 reported that 87% of respondents said their healthcare facility is short-staffed and 53% responded that they did not feel optimistic about the future of healthcare currently. Significant tailwinds such as a growing elderly population, aging RN workforce, nurse burnout, and shortage of nurse professors in university settings continue to put pressure on a shortage of nurses. The rising awareness of the benefits of temporary staffing such as an easier recruitment process, the opportunity to travel, and not having to worry about permanent housing have resulted in the profession gaining continued popularity.

One notable transaction this quarter was the acquisition of Favorite Healthcare Staffing by the European healthcare solutions provider, Acacium Group. Through this acquisition, Acacium Group became the first global healthcare staffing provider offering services in the US, Europe, and Australia.

Q1-2022 Home Health & Hospice Update

Market Update

The first quarter of 2022 marked a continuation of strong consolidation activity within the home health and hospice sectors. Both private equity firms and strategic investors remain bullish on home-based care, evidenced by several new platforms and transformational acquisitions in Q1. The most notable acquisition of the 1st quarter is United Health Group's (UNH) acquisition of LHC Group. In the past few years, Optum has made significant investment in its at-home care programs including the launch of Optum Housecalls and acquisitions of Landmark Health, NaviHealth, AbleTo, remaining stake in Kindred, and now LHC Group. By leveraging their existing provider bases and value-based care offerings, UHG and other "payviders" are realizing tremendous synergistic value by expanding into home-based care, serving as a catalyst for continued investment activity in the sector.

Q1-2022 Laboratory & Diagnostic Services Update

Market Update

Deal volume in the laboratory and diagnostic services sectors started off to a quick pace as several transactions originated in 2021 slipped into 2022. The prevalence of strategic add-on acquisitions continued as private equity and strategic consolidators further capitalize on a growing end-user market.

At the outset of 2022, COVID-19 testing centers nationwide struggled to meet the Omicron variant induced demand for accurate at home testing kits. As a result, investors and strategic consolidators alike looked to enhance point-of-care delivery models and buy-in on the emerging at home testing modality. Evidencing this trend, Sorrento Therapeutics acquired Virex Health, a developer of a novel at-home COVID-19 testing option. The acquisition expands Sorrento's testing portfolio to include affordable and easy-to-use testing options with a variety of end markets.

Looking ahead, Provident anticipates deal flow to remain high as large players continue to acquire smaller companies with a novel offering to broaden their network and expand service capabilities. Smaller companies will continue to see benefit from increased capital and access to technological advancements.

Q1-2022 Mental Health & Addiction Treatment Update

Market Update

Q1-2022 followed a record year for behavioral health M&A activity. Post-pandemic, the behavioral health sector received increased attention as mental health disorder diagnoses continue to rise in prevalence nationwide. Demand for counseling, psychiatric, and addiction treatment services remain at elevated levels.

With the rising demand for behavioral health services, both strategic and financial consolidators look to capitalize on the growing sector. Strategic consolidators aim to diversify service offerings, expand geographically to underserved communities, and obtain the best providers in the field. Financial consolidators seek platforms in emerging sub-sectors yet to be targeted by large consolidators. Additionally, investment hold periods continue to lengthen, signaling a new wave of "buy-and-build" strategies. Deal flow is further augmented as behavioral health companies broaden their digital health capabilities to match the growing preferences of patients and capture a larger patient-base.

Provident anticipates growth in the sector primarily through de novo acquisitions ranging in size as major players continue to expand horizontally and emphasize a move towards technology-centered care.

Q1-2022 Ophthalmology Update

Market Update

The eyecare sector continues to be one of the most active spaces within healthcare services driven by industry tailwinds and intense competition for deals. Q1 was an exceptionally active quarter with most closings taking place in January, likely due to delays at year end. The eased rhetoric around capital gains increases gave many owners comfort in closing their respective deals in CY 2022, contributing to an influx of deal activity in the first few weeks of the year.

With transaction volume hitting record levels in Q1, Provident expects a slight slow down in activity for add-on deals throughout the rest of the year as a few notable PE-backed platforms focus on sale processes of their own.

Q1-2022 Payor Services Update

Market Update

M&A activity in the Payor Services sector is off to a strong start in 2022. A total of nine investments have been made in the first quarter, four of which were made by private equity firms. Provident believes the continued platform creation by financial sponsors is a key indicator the sector will be a prime target for M&A over the next several years.

The target companies span a wide range of both service offerings and end-user profiles, though many of the companies have an overarching theme of value-based care. For example, Vistria Group invested in Professional Health Care Network, a company that coordinates home health care on behalf of health plans to facilitate the transition to value-based care. The national shift to value-based care will be a driving force of payor services investment for the foreseeable future.

Q1-2022 Pharmaceutical Services Update

Market Update

The first quarter of 2022 was another exciting quarter for deal activity within the broader outsourced pharma services space. The start of the year has observed many diverse transactions across several sub-verticals of pharma services, including amongst CDMOs, clinical research sites / organizations, consulting and other human capital-based companies, and software / tech-enabled companies. Provident closed two site transactions in 2021 and is currently working on a number of other pharma services mandates. Provident also expects this fragmented space to mirror 2021's consolidation activity as investors and strategic buyers still remain well capitalized.

Q1-2022 Pharmacy & Infusion Services Update

Market Update

Following the formation of several new platform investments in the infusion space, Q1 2022 marked a continuation in deal activity across both add-ons and new platforms. Notable add-on transactions included the acquisition of NBN Infusions by PromptCare (backed by Waud Capital) and Wasatch Infusion by Option Care Health. On the platform side, Ridgemont Equity Partners recapitalized specialty infusion provider American Outcomes Management.

This heightened deal volume creates meaningful opportunity for organizations seeking outside capital to fund growth initiatives and/or realize owner liquidity as the number of acquirers with significant capital resources at their disposal continues to grow. Provident expects deal volumes to persist into Q2 2022 and beyond.

Q1-2022 Physician Services Update

Market Update

Physician services transactions have continued at a strong rate in the first quarter of 2022 as pent-up demand has led to increased deal flow over the last year. Provident anticipates strong M&A activity for physician deals in 2022, buoyed by activity in emerging specialties such as urology, orthopedics, and cardiology. Investors remain eager to deploy capital to partner with premium assets in the space, leading to elevated valuations given heightened competition.

Notable Transaction

Q1-2022 Primary Care Update

Market Update

In Q1-2022, Provident observed continued consolidation in the primary care services sector. Following the pandemic, the demand for accessible care along with an aging population drove significant transaction activity. The sector which was once characterized as being less profitable within the healthcare space, has attracted new interest from private equity firms. Part of this newfound interest can be accredited to the shift towards value-based care (VBC) models. The transition from fee-for-service to incentivizing providers on accountability of patient care has provided evidence of enhanced care.

Practices are also focusing their efforts on what insurers are more willing to pay for, managing chronic conditions, and reducing preventable hospital visits. Companies like Humana have already announced eager plans for 2022 including the introduction of their CenterWell clinics in three additional states and increasing their presence from 240 to 260 clinics by the end of the year. Many comparable competitors such as Optum, CVS Health, and VillageMD have also been increasing their primary care clinics rapidly. Provident believes that in 2022, the primary care services sector will be marked by an influx of both large and mid-sized players consolidating at an accelerated pace.

Q1-2022 Rehabilitation Update

Market Update

Merger and acquisition activity within the rehabilitation sector continued at a strong pace during the first quarter of 2022. Private equity investors remain bullish on the space evidenced by three new platform investments and one secondary buyout in Q1. While the outpatient physical therapy space has consolidated for some time, we're also seeing a renewed interest in contract therapy evident by Lee Equity Partner's investment in Therapy Partner Solutions. The industry-wide labor shortage and wage pressures have exacerbated supply and demand imbalances for therapy services in hospitals, SNFs, and other post-acute settings, leading to an increased demand for contract therapy services. Outpatient providers have faced similar challenges as well, hindering some groups' ability to grow organically. As a result, we're seeing platforms become more reliant on M&A growth strategies in order to reach targeted growth milestones, which has consequently increased competition and valuations in transaction processes.

Q1-2022 Private Equity Update

Commentary

After PE dealmaking set a record in 2021, with more than ~6,000 transactions, transaction volume in Q1-22 dipped off its recent highs to its lowest quarterly level in over one year. However, capital invested remains above historical norms. Overall, PE investors remain fairly bullish across a variety of healthcare subsectors despite the ongoing threats of inflation, rising interest rates, and conflict in eastern Europe. Healthcare services companies are still considered a more defensible asset class than many other industries.

Fears of an increase in long-term capital gains have also subsided which are giving sellers and investors more comfort and confidence to execute transactions in 2022. Provident expects transaction volume in physician services to remain steady in all subspecialty areas, especially those that have multiple ancillary services (including ambulatory surgery), substantial growth potential, experienced value-based care programs, and experienced management teams.

Specifically, multi-site cardiology practices are experiencing a sharp rise in both capital invested and deal volume, with several new platforms created in the last 12 months; Ares Private Equity, Silversmith Partners, and Webster Equity are three notable PE firms that have created cardiology platforms.

Provident anticipates PE healthcare services add-on and platform activity will continue strong into Q2-22, as middle-market transactions ride on the tailwinds of strong economic recovery, an abundance of dry powder, and a supply / demand imbalance for premium healthcare services assets.

Concluding Thoughts

Healthcare services M&A activity in Q1 2022 followed several consistent trends from 2021. Year-to-date activity totals over 300 closed transactions representing more than $25 billion in invested capital. Recovery from the pandemic, technological advancements, and evolving reimbursement models drive consolidation for both physician practices and other healthcare services.

Physician services such as ophthalmology, gastroenterology, and orthopedics witnessed the highest level of closed transactions this quarter, a result of highly acquisitive private-equity backed platforms in the space. Provident anticipates continued add-on activity as well as successful exits by these expanding platforms throughout the year.

Other healthcare services such as home health, behavioral healthcare, and healthcare IT are also experiencing rapid consolidation as healthcare strategies are shifting towards more patient-centric and value-based care models. Provident expects accelerated growth in these sectors for the next several quarters as an increasingly diverse set of investors compete for market share.

In 2021, the healthcare market experienced record-setting transaction volume and invested capital. The first quarter of 2022 cooled slightly but does not indicate a decrease in investor commitment to the sector. Several macroeconomic factors such as the threat of increased interest rates did not deter investors in Q1, signaling the strong conviction in the space. With a highly anticipated remainder of the year, 2022 is expected to be extremely productive for healthcare M&A.

Provident is the leading investment banking firm offering mergers and acquisition advisory services for high growth, middle market companies in the healthcare industry.

The firm has a vast network of senior industry relationships, a thorough knowledge of market sectors and specialties, and unsurpassed experience and insight into the investment banking process.
